

Map Navigation

One of the key elements of handgunlaw.us that separates how we do things from other sites is the way we standardize not only the format of the site, but in how we present the visual maps, and how they function to help you get the relevant data. Each US map shown on the top of various pages presents you with different data, or forms of data.

Using the map below, you'll notice highlighted blocks on each state abbreviation.

On the maps found on our site (not this one, this one is simply a static image for demonstration only), the highlighted block areas are all active. That means if you hover or click in roughly the areas shown blocked in the map above on our active maps found on our site pages (you won't be able to see the actual blocks on those pages), they will react the way they were programmed to.

These highlighted blocks are known as “mapped zones”. Each mapped zone allows the ability to link that zone to any other page or location on any page, that the programmer wants you to see. They can also be programmed to allow the site visitor to read a short note the programmer wishes you to read.

Our maps are all active maps. Hover your mouse over the state abbreviation, as shown in the highlighted mapped zones above, and you'll be able to read the state name. If you click your mouse in those mapped zones, you'll open the appropriate page that's linked to the map. To return to handgunlaw.us, simply close the new browser window you just opened and you'll find that handgunlaw.us is exactly where you left it.
